The science behind the sounds

The Babbler babbles more than just a pleasing string of sounds. The phonics and phrases really mean something - particularly to your baby. Researchers have shown that exposing children to sounds of different languages early in life allows them to more easily learn a second language when they grow up. The Babbler speaks the trilling R's of Spanish and the clipped intonations of Japanese and presents those sounds in the context of actual words. A developing brain that gets a chance to process those unique sounds is better prepared to process them again when, years down the road, it's time to learn a new language.
